

All Angles – Winter Newsletter

Winter Edition 2008

Fancy getting married somewhere unusual?

A local couple have tied the knot in what is thought to be Devon's first underground marriage ceremony. Kents Cavern in Torquay, which was used as a dwelling thousands of years ago, has a licence to hold civil weddings. Flint axes that date back 450,000 years have been found in Britain's oldest scheduled Ancient Monument.

For more information about the privately owned caves visit their website www.kentscavern.com.

All Angles – 2009 Brings New Sash Colours

We have some fantastic new sash colours including this fabulous Sparkly Teal organza sash to add to our existing teal and blue colours.

Our portfolio continues to grow so if you have a particular colour in mind don't hesitate to contact us.

More Choice for Church Weddings

Couples in England now have greater choice over where to get married as new Anglican Church rules come into force.

The new law makes it easier for brides and grooms to have their wedding service in a church where they have a family or special connection. Previously, couples could get married in a church only if they attended it regularly or lived within the parish.

The Church of England said it was now able to offer the "widest wedding welcome" in its history although the new rules don't apply to cathedrals.

Previously, to marry in another parish required a special licence or six months regular attendance there. Now couples can marry anywhere they have lived for six months or where their parents or grandparents were married.

Times have changed and the new law is a direct response to both the increased social mobility of people, and way in which the tight restrictions were putting some people off marrying in a church.

Tips for the Big Day – Choosing A Photographer

Each newsletter we hope to provide you with useful hints and tips for creating the perfect wedding - following recent requests for photographer recommendations we have put together the following:

- 1) Choose your style – Each individual photographer has his or her own style. Take a look at their portfolio and if it's the type of style (classic/modern, groups/candid/abstract) you like, talk some more.
- 2) Book early – in many cases photographers can only do one photo shoot per day – once you've set your date make choosing a photographer one of your highest priorities.
- 3) Personality matters – Getting on with your photographer will help to ensure you get the photos you want.
- 4) Be clear from the start – Most photographers have a checklist they will go through with you prior to the big day. If there are any specific photos you want of certain groups or people tell your photographer – in most cases they will be happy to accommodate your wishes.
